Name: Trevor Hunter

Address:

244 Chambers Court
London

Occupation: Associate Professor of Management

Work experience: Associate Professor of Management, King's University College: 2002-present: Specializing in teaching and researching international business and corporate governance

Education: B.A. Hons. (Sociology): King's University College MBA: Ivey Business School PhD: Ivey Business School

Skills: Along with researching and teaching corporate governance for nearly 15 years I frequently provide governance consultation to organizations in and around the City. I teach governance to other directors and potential directors through Pillar Non-profit Network, The United Way and The London Community Foundation as well as Western's Continuing Studies program. I feel the combination of my international business and governance experience make me a good candidate to help govern this vital part of our economy. I have also done a market study for the airport in the past that gave me insight into the airport's operations and operating environment that most non-members would not have.

Interest reason: I feel that the airport is one of the resources that can provide the London economy with a comparative advantage and as we struggle to revive the economy, I would like to be part of the solution. I feel I can assist the community by bringing what skills I have to an important institution to help it fulfill its mission. I may be geeky, but I find boards and governance fascinating and I really enjoy working with others at the board level to help organizations tackle issues. I would welcome the task of helping the airport as it helps the community by being on the board and practicing what I know.

Contributions: I am an experienced board member who is not afraid to ask hard questions and make sure the organization is focused on its mission. I understand the ways in which the global economic, political and business environments affect organizations and can assist in strategy development. I understand the big picture for strategy and the details of governance oversight. I feel my background compliments the existing board members' skillsets very well.

Past contributions: I am currently the past chair of London's Small Business Centre board, a member of the King's University College Foundation board, a member of the advisory board of Try Recycling and a past director of Youth Opportunities Unlimited. On these boards I have assisted in policy development, strategic planning, executive performance evaluation, board and committee restructuring and operational oversight.

Interpersonal: As a professor of management who teaches introductory courses as well as capstone courses to graduating students as well as adult learners from around the world, I am quite adept at working with people from various backgrounds and integrating their views with others' as well as my own. I am sensitive to the different levels of skills, abilities and knowledge students may have and work hard to ensure that everyone is included and heard. I am consistently ranked as one of the better professors at Kings and have been in the past, awarded for my teaching by the graduating class.

Interview interest: Yes
