

Hello, I am sending this email to voice my deep concern about allowing chickens in London backyards. I have no desire to live near a slaughterhouse, so why would I have to then possibly see my neighbour kill their chickens? Not to mention that they are animals and as such they should be deserving of protection from abuse or mistreatment, will there be laws in place and enforcement to protect them? Will someone be coming to make sure that there is adequate housing? Some people in this city have a hard time with their cats and dogs, hence LACC, and the city just wants to go ahead and add another animal into the mix? This is going to strain an already strained system.

Please add this to the official public record if possible.
